

Independent schools and 21st century education

Hosted by EdLeader21 members Jonathan Martin of St. Gregory College Preparatory School (Tucson, AZ) and Chris Thinnes of Curtis School (Los Angeles, CA)

DATE: March 1, 2012

TIME: 7 – 7:45 am

LOCATION: Washington State Convention Center, Room 305

We invite you to join us for coffee to learn more about EdLeader21, the nation's first professional learning community of education leaders committed to 21st century learning.

Ken Kay, CEO of EdLeader21 and founding President of the Partnership for 21st Century Skills (P21), will join us via live video exchange to present a unique opportunity for independent school educators to participate in a professional learning community of independent and public school leaders from all across the nation who are committed to 21st century learning.

EdLeader21 broadens your network of forward-thinking educational colleagues beyond your circle of NAIS and other independent/independent school associations by connecting you to a strong, collaborative network of some of the most progressive and innovative 21st century education leaders in the nation.

Public purpose is a calling for many of us: EdLeader21 offers one of the best opportunities anywhere for independent school educators to join forces with public education leaders in developing new practices to improve learning for students in all sectors.

If you are seeking greater opportunities to learn about and collaborate around best practices in educational innovation and to advance your school's progress in becoming a "School of the Future," join us to learn more about all EdLeader21 has to offer independent school educational leaders.
